Many people think of Australia as a dangerous country because of its animals: snakes, spiders, crocodiles, sharks and jellyfish. Films and social media often show only the scary side.

Official health advice gives a calmer picture. In Australia, only about one to four people die from snake bites each year. Shark attacks and crocodile attacks are also rare. Far more people die on the roads.

You can still stay safe. Never walk in long grass in bare feet. Do not put your hands into holes. In the north, respect Croc Country signs. In Queensland, in stinger season (November to May), swim between the flags and wear a stinger suit if needed. If a snake bites you, call 000, keep still, and use a pressure bandage. Do not wash, cut or suck the wound.

★★ B2 · A closer look at the figures

Healthdirect Australia says there are about 3,000 snake bites a year, but only one to four deaths. Funnel-web spiders are a medical emergency; redback bites are…

Your work

1. Read your level text.
2. List four animals that scare some visitors.
3. Find two official safety rules.
4. Compare animal deaths and road deaths. What do you notice?
5. EOI, 2 minutes: Would this stop you from going? Give one reason yes, or one reason no.
